Boston, MA – The Melanoma Action Coalition (MAC) has teamed up with The Melanoma Foundation of New England (MFNE) and salons across the country to educate beauty professionals on how to spot signs of skin cancer and melanoma on clients' scalps.

The Melanoma Foundation of New England began their signature Skinny On Skin program six years ago and has trained over 6,000 beauty industry professionals. As some of the only professionals to closely examine skin on a regular basis, stylists, estheticians, nail technicians, and other skin professionals are in a unique position to spot melanoma on a client long before anyone else. The Skinny On Skin teaches beauty industry professionals how to screen for suspicious moles while performing common salon services.

The Melanoma Action Coalition is an organization of community-based melanoma foundations and individuals from across the United States working together to promote melanoma awareness, education, prevention, and research. "We are thrilled to have partnered with melanoma awareness organizations across the country to spread education," said Deb Girard, Executive Director of the Melanoma Foundation of New England. "We've seen such success with this program on a regional level, that the idea of taking it to the next level is a natural fit."

"We at MAC are delighted to be partnering with the Melanoma Foundation of New England to introduce The Skinny On Skin to a wider audience," said Neil Spiegler, chair of the Melanoma Action Coalition Steering Committee. "Educating beauty industry professionals is an exciting addition to the many training and awareness activities in which our members already engage. We look forward to using the strength of our combined voices to promote this valuable program nationwide."
